Section 2/7: Your Offer

Cold traffic does not buy services. It buys outcomes.

Cold outreach only works when what lands in front of a stranger is genuinely worth their attention, and that comes down to your offer, not clever wording.

The hardest part of cold outreach is getting a stranger to agree to a call. That is the job of the offer, so promise boldly. A strong claim is what earns the reply, and it is not a promise you owe to everyone who answers. You make it in full only to the prospects who turn out to be a real fit, and you sort that out on the call. If the details need to shift once you are talking to them, that is completely normal and legit. So don't hold back here.

The stronger and more specific you are, the more we can promise on your behalf, the more replies we pull, and the more you can charge for your service. So don't undersell yourself.

What do you sell? ★

Plain and specific. "An AI tool that automates invoice reconciliation for finance teams," not "we're in fintech."

Managed AI customer support agents for ecommerce brands. We build, launch and operate an AI agent that resolves support tickets end to end: it checks orders, processes refunds and returns, fixes shipping and delivery issues, and edits orders inside the brand's own systems (Shopify/WooCommerce/Magento + helpdesks), with approval rules and human escalation. Not a chatbot that answers FAQs - an agent that finishes the work. Fully managed: we set it up, operate it and improve it every week.

What outcomes do you create for clients? Be as specific as you can, preferably with numbers and a timeframe. ★

The result a buyer with budget actually responds to is concrete and time-bound: "cut month-end close from 10 days to 2 within your first quarter" or "30% more qualified demos in 60 days," not "we help you grow."

The number tells them how big the win is, the timeframe tells them how fast they'll feel it, and together they turn a vague promise into something real.

List as many real outcomes as you have. If you've never measured one, give your best honest estimate and where it comes from.

Real, verified client outcomes (all from live case studies):

- Outlier Group / The Scent Reserve (UK beauty ecommerce): 80%+ of tickets resolved end-to-end by the AI agent, and their public Trustpilot rating went from 3.5 to 4.1.
 - Fold (reformer pilates equipment): 100% of initial customer responses handled by AI within under five weeks of launch.
 - Modibodi (period underwear, AU brand): ~70% of inquiries resolved without a human representative.
- Speed: the agent is live in 10 days from kickoff - a documented launch process, not a months-long implementation project. Typical first response time drops to under 10 seconds, 24/7 coverage including weekends and holiday peaks (Black Friday).

How do you achieve these outcomes? List the features and the mechanisms behind the result. ★

Walk us through how it actually works. Include anything with a specific name, any mechanism you think is genuinely clever or interesting, and anything that sets you apart from others doing something similar.

This is what makes a stranger believe the outcome when it sounds too good to be true or when the market has already heard every version of the pitch.

1. Approved actions, not answers: the agent executes refunds, returns, reshipments, order edits and address changes inside the client's own stack (Shopify/WooCommerce/Magento + Zendesk/Gorgias/etc.), gated by per-action approval rules the client controls. Anything outside scope escalates to a human WITH full context - no "let me transfer you" resets.
 2. Sales, not just support: the agent answers pre-sale questions instantly (sizing, availability, shipping times, product comparisons) and recommends products from the live catalog - buying-intent conversations get closed in the moment instead of dying in a queue overnight. Fold's 100% response coverage is exactly this: pre-sale answers that convert. Modibodi generates roughly 20,000 ILS/month in sales through the agent.
 3. The operated QA loop (our core differentiator): competitors hand you a tool to configure and babysit. We operate the agent - every week we review real conversations, catch drift, apply correction signals and tune. The agent improves every day instead of decaying after setup. "Operated beats installed."
 4. The 10-Day Launch: days 1-3 map workflows and connect systems, days 4-7 train and test (draft-only mode - the agent writes answers a human approves before anything goes live), days 8-10 launch and monitor. Scoped access, audit trail on every action.
 5. Native-quality Hebrew AND English support (for IL brands: correctly gendered, idiomatic Hebrew - not translated-sounding).

What do you take off the client's plate? List all of it. ★

Start with everything you already do: every feature your software runs, every deliverable, every task you handle for them, or everything you manage on their behalf.

On top of that, what more could you take on, especially for bigger clients?

Things you're able to do but don't always include: onboarding, data migration, a dedicated CSM, custom setup, hands-on support. You don't have to offer these across the board. If something only makes sense for you for a certain segment or a larger account, that's completely fine, just mention it. The point is to see the full range of what you could put on the table.

Everything between "we have too many tickets" and "it's handled":

- Full setup: workflow mapping, helpdesk + store integrations, policy and macro ingestion, tone-of-voice training
- Writing and maintaining the agent's knowledge: returns policy, sizing, shipping rules, product Q&A
- Ongoing operation: weekly QA review of conversations, tuning, adding new intents, drift correction
- Monitoring and reporting: resolution rates, escalations, CSAT signals
- Human escalation design: routing rules, handoff with full context

For bigger clients: multi-brand / multi-storefront deployments under one operation (per-brand voice), custom integrations, helpdesk migration handled by us as part of onboarding, WhatsApp channel deployment, dedicated operator attention. No setup fees at any tier; 30-day money-back guarantee.

 Drop any links related to your offer here: landing pages, VSLs, pitch decks, or any marketing material or asset that explains what you do and how you help.

Section 3/7: Who We Reach

This section defines exactly who we put your offer in front of. The clearer you are on who your best customers are and how to spot them, the sharper we target and personalize.

Describe your ideal customer in detail.

What kind of company they are, what they do, their size (employees and revenue), their stage, their location if it matters, the setup or tools they tend to have, and whatever about their situation makes them a strong fit. Think about the accounts you close fastest, keep longest, and get the best results for. Paint a real picture, not just a category.

Two parallel markets, same profile: (1) Israeli DTC brands (Hebrew outreach) and (2) UK/US DTC brands (English outreach). The profile: brands selling from their own storefront (fashion, beauty, footwear, jewelry, home, baby, supplements), on Shopify or WooCommerce (sometimes Magento), doing roughly 500-20,000 support tickets a month - usually 5-100 employees, with 1-5 support reps (or the founder) drowning in WISMO ("where is my order"), returns, exchanges and sizing questions. Helpdesk today: Zendesk, Gorgias, Freshdesk, Glassix, Crisp - or just a shared Gmail and (in IL) WhatsApp. Strong-fit situations: running paid acquisition (every campaign creates a support wave), seasonal peaks (Black Friday), visible public complaints about slow support (Trustpilot). We close fastest with founder-led brands where the founder personally feels the support pain. Proof matches both markets: UK flagship case study (Outlier Group / The Scent Reserve), IL (Modibodi), IL (Papaya, Shlomit Ofir, Ecolove). Anti-persona: dropshippers, marketplace-only sellers with no own site, sub-500 tickets/month stores, and anyone who wants a generic chatbot instead of a managed service that owns the queue.

How many companies like this do you think are out there?

Your best honest estimate, or a number you actually know. We'll test it afterwards. This tells us how big your core target is before we plan around it.

Israel: honest estimate 2,000-4,000 active DTC brands in our band; core sweet spot (500+ tickets/month) more like 500-1,000. UK/US: tens of thousands of Shopify/WooCommerce brands in the band - effectively unlimited for cold email purposes; the constraint there is targeting quality, not list size.

Inside those companies, who do we need to reach, and who should we skip? ★

Start with who's actually right: the titles and roles that matter, who signs off, and who else weighs in. Then flag who looks close but is the wrong person to talk to. For the right people, from your own experience selling this, tell us any specific context or angle that works on them, what a given role cares about, what opens them up, what to lead with. There's usually more than one worth reaching per company, so name all of them.

Reach (in order): 1. Founder / CEO - at SMB size they sign off, and the money math lands with them: the service starts at $800/month vs. a support hire at 8-10k ILS/month plus management. Lead with revenue protection and Black Friday readiness. 2. COO / Operations lead - cares about the queue being owned, SLAs, audit trail, escalation rules. 3. Head of CX / Customer Service Manager - lead with "your team stops drowning and handles exceptions only, handoff comes with full context." Important: position as making their team senior, not replacing them. 4. Ecommerce Manager - lead with "support load stops eating the growth your campaigns create." In multi-brand groups: group COO / digital director (one deal covers several storefronts). Skip: marketing managers (no support budget), IT (blocker, not buyer), frontline support agents (fear replacement, will stall it), and procurement-led enterprises (cycle too long for this motion).

Point us at your best current customers, and tell us about them. ★

Company names or websites of the accounts you'd want ten more of. For each, a line on their profile and what actually made them such a good fit. The pattern in who you've already won is the strongest signal we have for finding more like them.

- Papaya shoes (נעלי פפאיה, IL footwear): 200-400 of ~1,000 monthly inquiries close without a human. Returns/sizing-heavy category - the perfect ticket shape. - Modibodi (period underwear): ~70% of inquiries resolved without a representative. Sensitive category, proves tone quality. - Outlier Group / The Scent Reserve (UK beauty): 80%+ of tickets resolved end-to-end, public Trustpilot went 3.5 to 4.1. Our flagship case study: getadelante.com/case-study/outlier-group. - Fold (reformer pilates): 100% of initial responses handled by AI within five weeks; pre-sale questions answered fast = more conversions, not just cheaper support. - Shlomit Ofir (IL jewelry), Ecolove (IL cosmetics): classic Israeli SMB DTC shape, Hebrew-speaking agents in production. The pattern: DTC brand with high repeat WISMO/returns volume, a small overloaded support team, and a founder or ops lead who decides fast.

What signals tell you a company or a person is worth reaching right now? ★

These become the reason we open the conversation, the personal hook at the top of the email, so the more you give us the sharper we get. Think across a few types:

The company: funding, growth, hiring, expansion into a new market, a recent launch, a new office.

The people: a new leader in a key seat, someone who just stepped into the role, a departure that left a gap.

Their setup: a specific tool in their stack, a technology they run, a platform they're on.

Timing: seasonality, renewal windows, a deadline or event in their world.

List whatever you know under each, even loosely.

Company signals: - Trustpilot score: a brand with real order volume sitting below ~4.0, especially with recent 1-star reviews mentioning "no response from support" / "still waiting for my refund" - we open the email with their exact review and how the agent would have handled it. Our flagship case study is literally this story: Trustpilot 3.5 to 4.1 after the agent went live. - Actively running paid campaigns (Facebook Ads Library / visible IG ads) - every campaign creates a support wave they can't staff for. - Hiring customer support reps (job boards) = drowning right now; our offer replaces that hire with a cheaper line that starts in 10 days. - Just launched a new site/store, rebrand, or expanded to a new market / added an English store. - Seasonal category ahead of its peak.

People signals(Assumed): - New Head of CX / Ecommerce Manager in first 90 days (wants a quick win). Setup signals: - On Shopify or WooCommerce (must-have). - Detectable helpdesk (Zendesk/Gorgias/Freshdesk/Glassix/Crisp) or, equally good, NO chat at all on a high-traffic store. - WhatsApp button on site (IL brands) - customers already write there, response gap is visible. Timing: - Right now is the Black Friday prep window: agent is live in 10 days, so signing in Jul-Sep means fully operated before peak season. - Secondary: January returns wave; Israeli brands also spike before Rosh Hashana and holiday sales.

Also, consider monitoring crossbeam for new zendesk customers that are shopify leads and hit them up the moment they sign up for Zendesk.

Section 4/7: Risk Reversal

A stranger has no reason to trust you yet, so the fastest way to earn a reply is to take the risk off them. There are two ways to do that: proof that you've done this before, and a guarantee that you'll do it for them. The stronger either one is, the more people say yes.

What results have you gotten clients? Give us the real numbers. *

The proof that converts is specific and measurable: a before and after, a timeframe, and who it was for. "Took [client] from X to Y in three months." Vague praise ("great to work with," "highly recommend") does almost nothing on cold traffic, while a hard number does the heavy lifting.

List every result you can stand behind. If you don't have exact figures, give us the closest version and we'll work with it. These become the proof lines in your copy and the case studies we send to warm a prospect before the call.

- Outlier Group / The Scent Reserve (UK beauty ecommerce): from a drowning human team to 80%+ of tickets resolved end-to-end by the AI agent; public Trustpilot rating climbed from 3.5 to 4.1. Attributed to James, Head of Group Operations, in the written case study.
 - Fold (reformer pilates): 100% of initial customer responses handled by AI within under five weeks of launch.
 - Modibodi: ~70% of inquiries resolved without a human representative.
 - Papaya shoes (IL): 200-400 out of ~1,000 monthly inquiries close with zero human involvement.
 - Across deployments: first response drops to seconds, coverage becomes 24/7, and the agent is live within 10 days of kickoff.

Do you already lower the risk for new clients in any way? *

Start with what you have today: a guarantee, a free trial or pilot, a money-back promise, a first-month assurance, anything that tells a cautious buyer they won't lose out. Give it to us as it stands.

Today, as it stands: - 30-day money-back guarantee. - No setup fees at all, month-to-month, no long-term contract. - Live in 10 days,. - Starting price $800/month including 5,000 AI messages, which is well under the cost of a single support hire.

Now think about how far you could take it. ★

This is often the single biggest lever on whether a stranger replies, the less they feel they can lose, the more likely they say yes.

Look back at the outcomes you described earlier, pick one you're genuinely confident you'll deliver, and put a promise behind it. For example, "you'll hit [that outcome] within [timeframe] or your next month is on us," or "a free first pilot so you see it work before you commit."

Remember you only owe the boldest version to the prospects who turn out to be a real fit, and that gets sorted on the call, so you can afford to be generous.

Explore it, whatever you'd genuinely stand behind is worth putting here.

The version we can stand behind (combining existing commitments): "Live in 10 days on your real tickets. First it runs in draft mode so you approve every reply before it ships - you literally watch it work before it flies solo. If you're not convinced within the first 30 days, full money back. No setup fee, no contract - the only thing you risk is a mapping call." Directionally open : if we miss the 10-day launch on our side, the first month is on us. Do NOT promise specific resolution percentages upfront (e.g., "you'll hit 80%") - results vary by ticket mix; we show the case-study numbers as proof and set targets on the call.

Drop any proof assets you have.

Testimonials, screenshots, case study docs, Google or G2 reviews, video clips, logos of notable clients. URLs or Drive links (set to "anyone with the link can view"). If it exists, we'd rather use the real thing than have you describe it.

 - Written case study, Fold: <https://www.getadelante.com/case-study/fold>
 - Live third-party proof: The Scent Reserve's public Trustpilot page - search reviews for "Stacey", "Ashley" or "Pedro"; those are the AI agents' names, customers praise them by name without knowing they're AI.
 - Compliance badges: SOC 2 Type II, GDPR.
 - Marketplace listings: Shopify App Store and Zendesk Marketplace (searchable under Adelante).

Section 5/7: Samples

The best cold emails don't open by asking for a call, they open by offering something valuable. A prospect who won't take a meeting will happily accept a free sample, a quick teardown, or an example built for their own company, and that's what turns into the conversation. This section is about what we can put in front of them, both to earn the first reply and to warm them up before the call.

What could we give a prospect for free that they'd actually want, can we get access to your product to build it? *

The best giveaway is one a prospect says yes to without thinking twice: a tailored example, a sample of your output, a quick teardown of their setup, a demo, a genuinely useful resource. Generic "free audits" are dead.

The strongest version is one we generate ourselves, so if you can give us a test account or limited access, we can run each prospect's own company through your product and hand them the result, personalized and already done.

This is just an example, and a valuable lead magnet could be created and fulfilled without an access as well. Everything depends in

Tell us what you'd offer and what access is possible.

1. Review teardown opener (not even a giveaway - a hook): we pull their public negative reviews about support response times and open the email with the exact quote + how the agent would have handled it.
2. Self-serve on site: support self-audit (getadelante.com/support-audit) and an ROI calculator. Product access: it's an operated service wired into each client's live store and helpdesk, so there's no blanket test account to hand over. But for warm prospects Tamir can spin up a tailored demo on their own catalog fast - route those requests to him.

Drop any assets that show your work.

Demos, sample reports, example outputs, explainer videos, one-pagers, case study docs.

Some become the giveaway in the email, others we send after a prospect books to keep them warm and cut no-shows.

Section 6/7: Past Effort

What's your experience with cold outreach so far? *

Email, LinkedIn, cold calling, paid ads, any of it. What you tried, the numbers you saw, what worked, what flopped, and your own read on why.

Active cold-email operation on Instantly with 16 warmed inboxes across several sending domains. What we learned, with numbers: 1. Generic unpersonalized sequence to ecommerce brands: 657 sends, 3 positive replies, 2 opt-outs. Killed it. Read: no personalization + generic value prop = dead on arrival. 2. Personalized founder-level campaigns (current, working): Hebrew campaign to Israeli agencies - ~120 contacted, 8 replies (~7% reply rate), 1 intro call booked + 2 more in scheduling within 48 hours. English campaign to US/UK ecommerce agencies - 875 leads loaded, first human replies on day 3. What made the difference: per-lead openers referencing THEIR actual clients/portfolio (e.g., "saw you built X's store"), named proof numbers in the body (80%+, Trustpilot 3.5 to 4.1), and short direct asks. 3. Role inboxes (info@/hello@) DO respond in this market - we send to both role + founder addresses. 4. Other channels: Shopify/Zendesk marketplace listings outperform the website ~3:1 on inbound. LinkedIn barely used. No cold calling. Small Meta paid test, unproven. Note: our sender infrastructure is live and warmed - coordinate with Tamir before adding volume on the same domains so deliverability isn't split. We also ran a cold outbound campaign in September that brought in Shlomit ofir, Shani Jacobi, Shoez , and Papaya.

Export and share everything you have. *

This is the big one, and it saves us both time. Don't summarize it, just send us the raw material:

- Past cold email scripts and sequences, even old or bad ones.
- Cold-call scripts, and any call recordings or transcripts.
- Lead lists, CRM exports, purchased databases.
- Full campaign data from any sending tool you've used (Instantly, Smartlead, Apollo, and the like), exported in full.
- Anything else you've built for outreach.

Drop links (set to "anyone with the link can view"), or tell us where it lives and we'll walk you through pulling the export.

Everything lives in our Instantly workspace: full campaigns with sequences, send data and replies (EN Agencies, HE Agencies, HE AI Agent, UK Trustpilot outbound, plus the killed generic campaign - useful as a what-not-to-do), and validated lead lists built through an Apollo + DeBounce enrichment pipeline (agencies + brands, with personalization fields per lead). Tamir will export and share the relevant CSVs and sequence copy directly - tell him which format you want. No CRM beyond that; pipeline currently tracked manually.

Section 7/7: Your Goals

How many sales calls are you currently generating each month on average? *

Historically 1-3 a month. it depends entirely on founder time.

How many sales calls are you looking to generate from us each month? *

10-15 qualified calls a month - qualified meaning an ecommerce brand founder in our ticket-volume band who knows it's about an operated AI support agent. Quality over volume: 8 real ones beat 20 tire-kickers.

If you could get one thing out of working with Flowroots to make it a smashing success for you, what would that be exactly? *

A repeatable calendar: qualified DTC brands - Israeli AND UK/US - booking workflow-mapping calls every week without the founder doing the prospecting. Concretely: enough qualified calls between now and October to sign 4-6 new brands before Black Friday (each worth $800+/month, some multi-brand groups worth several thousand). If by September the calendar fills itself and the campaign runs without eating founder hours, that's a smashing success.
